See you beyond.

No name.
No face.
Only the set.

The music is the face.

See you beyond.

See you beyond. SYB is a DJ with no name and no face: a helmet of gold mirror tiles, a closed black visor and a black couture moto jacket. Nobody agrees on the first sighting. The most repeated version is three in the morning on a private terrace above a harbour on the Riviera, a black superbike rolling up without headlights, a rider who walks to the decks without taking off the helmet, plays until the sky turns pale and is gone before anyone asks a name. Someone finds three letters engraved on the booth's gold edge: S Y B.

The music comes first. SYB plays house music without a break: deep house, tech house, melodic house, disco house, Latin house and Afro house, about 259 songs so far. Every blend is in key, every transition is locked to the beat and every drop lands on the beat, at 124 BPM from the first song to the last.

Three long-form sets are out on YouTube, each one a single continuous mix with a chapter list: Disco Nights (3h10m, disco house and disco tech house), Eclipse Temple (4h54m, deep house, tech house and melodic house) and Night Jungle Ritual (5h26m, Tulum Latin tech house and Afro house), more than thirteen hours in all. SYB also plays live around the clock on YouTube. Somewhere, it's always 3 a.m.

The story goes that every tile on the helmet was cut from the mirror ball of a dance floor that no longer exists, so it carries the history of the night: every club that closed, every sunrise set, every room that went quiet. SYB has never said what the letters stand for. The one clue is the last words written under a set: see you beyond. The rule is that the music is the face.
